

BREWERY

Whether setting up a meeting for 10 people in our private event space or a reception for 150 on the north side of the restaurant, we will work with you to execute a great event. Our private event space is a unique room in the middle of our brewery surrounded by our pilot system, and fermentation tanks.

A Master Craft

From where everything started – with one man and £100 – to where we are currently, we've been sharpening our specialty since 1759. With more than 20 world-class lagers underway and an abundance of energizing new blends being concocted every day by our ever-venturesome brewers, it's nothing unexpected that the Guinness name is known and adored in 150 nations. This crush at that point drops down into a kieve – or pound tun – that isolates the grain from a fluid we call 'sweet wort'. Yet, regardless of where it is fermented or served, you can be certain your Guinness is as yet roused by the spearheading clumps of our incredible heavy, made at St. James' Gate in Dublin, more than 200 years back.

THE PROCESS

This malted grain frames the establishment of our lager, deliberately squashed by our mix house processes at that point blended in with water from Poulaphouca Lake in County Wicklow. Water that is warmed and added to the crisply processed malted grain before the blend is squashed to extricate the fermenting sugars. This crush at that point drops down into a kieve – or pound tun – that isolates the grain from a fluid we call 'sweet wort'. It's since our one of a kind dull broiled grain becomes possibly the most important factor. The accuracy of the cooking procedure is the thing that gives our renowned hefty its particular.

OUR SIGNATURE BEER

Initially, Keith faced skepticism for introducing this new style of beer to drinkers. At the time, the American beer market was flooded with lagers, and the cloudy appearance of the unfiltered Belgian White Style Beer was unfamiliar.
